

Petitioning Government

Whereas; The practice of individuals and organizations, through letters or resolutions, petitioning government officials or their subordinates is grossly inadequate, and

Whereas; The serious effort of the petitioners with discussion and debate is futile when the end result is the lack of serious consideration or the shredder, and

Whereas; Elected officials or subordinates who receive petitions, letters and resolutions do not have the authority to properly process the request,

Therefore be it resolved; That the government of Canada take similar steps as the Parliaments of Britain and Europe and establish an independent bi-partisan committee that deals solely with the grievances and wishes of its citizens and not the wishes of professional lobbyists in a true and democratic manner.
